Carmignano, a small Tuscan appellation where Cabernet Sauvignon has grown since the 18th century, is always a blend of Sangiovese and Cabernet. It has, as a result, a bit more body, power, and sheer amplitude than Chianti Classico or Vino Nobile de Montepulciano. The wine is packed with Tuscan red wine flavors — earth, dried roses, espresso, dark chocolate, cedar, saddle leather, dried cherries, and a saline minerality that magnifies the deliciousness of the foods around it. Is there any country where people know their food and wine more than in Italy? Pick up a bottle of this and pretend you're there.
