Dark and bit reductive in the glass, the 2021 Nero d'Avola opens with a woodland-inspired blend of wild berries and peppery herbs. It's soft and enveloping with ripe red and blue fruit that swirl beneath an air of inner violet florals. This leaves a staining of primary concentration, finishing grippy and long while maintaining a lovely inner freshness. There's potential here, but the 2021 will require cellaring to come fully into focus.
