Bolgheri, near the Tuscan coast, has made a reputation in recent decades as being the fourth Tuscan region to make great red wines, but the only one that isn't exclusively powered by Sangiovese. This is a complex one, showing a very fruity bouquet featuring a suggestion of rose petals followed by flavors of ripe plums and dark cherries, all in a fairly light-bodied profile. However, there are tons of dusty tannins and some wood notes in the finish to corral any excessive exuberance. The grapes are all from the Bordeaux repertoire – the two Cabernets, Merlot and Petit Verdot.
